LANGUAGE OF CRIME.

THE ARGOT OF PARIS AND THE "PAT-TER" OF LONDON.

Thieves Have Special Words to Express Stealing of Every Kind—Material Changes Take Place Every Two or Three Years.

The language of criminals—the argot of Paris, the "patter" of London—has been carefully investigated by numerous writers, with very variant results.

Its origin is difficult to explain.
Criminals, say many authors, have found it necessary to adopt a technical language for their own protection, that they may be able to converse in public without being understood. "They have been forced to do this and have made a language as sinister and as vile as themselves." This theory cannot be admitted. Certainly the argot is sinister and vile and thoroughly representative of the class that uses it, but further than this we cannot go.

The theory that the use of this dialect is of any assistance to the criminal is unadmissible. Most policemen and all prison officers know this slang, sometimes better than the thieves. To speak it in the hearing of a detective is to invite arrest; to speak it in the presence of the general public would arouse suspicion and attract attention—two things which are especially to be avoided.

Why, then, does it exist? Dr. Laurent of the Santo prison in Paris has given an explanation which has at least nothing to contradict it: The persons engaged in every trade form a species of dialect or technical phraseology which is spoken and understood only by themselves. Criminals, who practice a trade as old as any, have gradually acquired a language more adapted to their wants, more in keeping with their ideas and thoughts. Miserable, heartless, engaged in a perpetual struggle against morality, law and decency, they have acquired a language of debased words and apical metaphors, a language of abrogated expressions and obscene synonims.

It has mutilated the mother tongue, and has borrowed liberally from all languages, but without methods or system. Criminals are not linguists. Neither do they imitate, and at first sight it would seem strange that they should import words from other countries. We will find, however, that in any prison the percentage of inmates of foreign birth will be large. In America it is about 15 per cent. A foreign expression which seems to be an improvement on the one in use is rapidly diffused through the prison, in cases where it is especially apt and it may become permanent, but it is usually short. The argot is a language of the street, a language of the underworld. It is a language which is only slightly when he changes more in ten years than the language does in ten centuries. In the last three years there have been three different terms for "supper," "thimble" and "white"—each of which was the only one used.

The argot on the subject has noticed that the argot is rich in expressions to denote certain common actions.
This is a peculiarity shared by all privative languages, the only difference being in the selection of the common acts.

Thus in Sanskrit there are nearly 100 roots which express the idea of killing or wounding, without counting secondary derivations. Some of these roots are embodied in our language today. In the dialect of the thieves there are nearly 100 expressions to signify theft. It was necessary for the pickpocket to describe the various pockets in a man's clothing and in a woman's dress. The average man does not often need to specify a particular pocket. When he does, he says, "I have it in the pocket of the poverty of the language. The thief has a separate word for each separate pocket.

Language of this richness in synonims, which is in itself a marked sign of degeneracy, for the tendency of a language is to eliminate its synonyms, giving each a different shade of meaning, the argot is a poor language.

It is not a single expression for abstraction of thought. To attempt to render a pleasure, a thought, a moral emotion, a sympathy, or the idea into the argot is to find that it would be like attempting to translate "electricity" or "atomism" into Latin. It is impossible because the words do not exist. They are not words. The criminal has no more conception of abstract emotion than a blind man has of color.

A fact which does not seem to ally the argot to a primitive language is its ability to form additional words from its own resources, a power of self development which we find in the old Anglo-Saxon, and especially in the German of today. This trait is the more striking as it occurs in direct contradiction to the impotence of the English language in this respect. The English has little formative power. It relies on the Greek and Latin languages for the extension of its vocabulary. —A. T. E.
Crofton in Popular Science Monthly.
